

Recession pushing more women to become primary breadwinners

Written by

Friday, 24 July 2009 16:49

In Minnesota and across the country, far more men have lost jobs during the recession than women, a situation that has reversed the role of 'family breadwinner' in some homes. Dr. Ira Wolfe, an expert on workforce trends and author of "The Perfect Labor Storm," says this trend began even before the economy went bust. "That shift already happened to occur. "

Podcast and entire story available:

<http://www.newsservice.org/index.php>